A skate to remember

"I've seen kids turn their lives around. It's usually a kid who's outside of the team-sport world, or maybe has a darker personality or doesn't fit in. Skateboarding ends up being something they latch onto." -Jeff Ament

Jakob Gaeta speaks about his first experiences while skating. "Well I first started skating when I was Eight and I remember being scared at first because I was so nervous I would slam but eventually I did and I got used to it. Since, skating has become so much more fun after I got over that fear." Falling down is one of the most terrifying fears for anyone who skates, so it is understandable that skaters who are more green feel this way. Jakob is a mini celebrity in the Thousand Oaks community for skateboarding, along side his friends. After seeing him skate everywhere for the past three years of my life I finally asked him why he did it. The answer is surprisingly the same for everyone, "the feeling of freedom and not caring is overwhelming." He says, "And I think that that has reflected in the way I look and dress, I like to express the skate world through what I wear." Jakob tends to wear more relaxed clothing that shows his carefree personality.
